Terms and definitions to help you understand and enjoy the game

16-yard hit: free hit for the defense, 16 yards from the goal after an offensive player hits the ball over the end line.

Advantage: When the defender causes a foul but the attacking team keeps possession of the ball. The referee will not blow the whistle and will signal to play on.

Back pass: a defensive pass to send the ball backwards to help the attacking team get the offense in place before moving forward on attack.

Give and Go: passing technique whereby the player passes the ball and then immediately sprints to receive a return pass.

Green card: issued by the referee as an official warning. Possession is NOT required to change.

Lifted ball: a lifted ball is generally called if it is dangerous to anyone on the field. To indicate a lifted ball, hold your arms out in front of you horizontally. Turn your hands so your palms face each other and place one hand on top of the other, with about one foot of space in between.

Obstruction: when one player uses her body to prevent another player from getting to the ball. To indicate an obstruction call, the referee crosses both arms in front of their chest.

Overhead: the lifting of a stationary or slower moving ball off the ground (over the player's head) by placing the head of the stick slightly under the ball and shoveling the ball forward.

Reverse stick: to turn the stick so that the blade points to the right, allowing a hit or push in that direction.

Penalty corner: called for any minor penalties—foot fouls, lifted balls, obstruction—inside the 25-yard zone. To indicate a penalty corner, point both hands and arms horizontally towards the goal.

Third party obstruction: when a player runs between her teammate (who has possession of the ball) and an opponent trying to get the ball, essentially blocking the opponent's path. To indicate third party obstruction, the referee alternates opening and closing their forearms in front of their chest.

Yellow card: issued by the referee and resulting in a temporary suspension, which must be for a minimum of five minutes duration without substitution. The maximum time is at the discretion of the referee.
